What I learned losing million dollars is a book based on the real life story of Jim Paul, trader and investor, and his trading adventure on the stock market during the period of 1970 - 1983. The book emphasizes on the psychological part of the trading process advocating that decisions based on emotions are biased and would lead to negative compound effect that overtime will have a detrimental effect over an individual. While such statement is a common sense for many of us probably only a ...

Compendium of old-school (non-quant) trader lore This book is actually a couple decades old. Anyone interested in this sort of thing ought to listen through at least one book like this. I like personally losing big as a centerpiece to the work: it wipes out that phony "I made a zillion dollars easy!" baloney. It seems to me that, with a basic arc of the story being, this writer was young and ...

Publishing, it turns out, is a job you can learn while doing, if people are willing to help a little. I was lucky to find my way into a publishing house that was not constrained by corporate hiring practices, so they could take a risk on someone like me. Those of us in publishing are here—at least this is what I believe, in my heart of hearts—because we love literature and ideas and we ...
